22 Best Restaurants in Vancouver Favor Sustainability

Travel Made Possible 2019
Two Sisters. 7 Countries. A Million Memories Made.
Expat Explore Travel Ltd.

Photograph: Courtesy Yelp/Crowbar

The 22 best restaurants in Vancouver

A variety of flavors inspired by different cuisines will attack your taste buds at the best restaurants in Vancouver

By Johanna Read
Posted: Monday July 23 2018

Vancouver’s multiculturalism and proximity to both the Pacific Ocean and British Columbia’s wide range of growing conditions mean a lot of good eating and a whole lot of fun things to do (https://www.timeout.com/vancouver/things-to-do/best-things-to-do-in-vancouver). The city’s top eateries tend to boast ever-changing menus that take advantage of whatever is freshest and tastiest from the area (don’t miss the spot prawns when in season from May-ish to July-ish). Sustainability is the norm here: most menus feature “ocean wise” sustainable seafood indicators. While you may be tempted to call it Pacific Northwest cuisine, don’t forget that While you may be tempted to call it Pacific Northwest cuisine, don’t forget that Vancouver is in Canada’s southwest corner. Are you ready? Here are the best restaurants in Vancouver.

Best restaurants in Vancouver
Hawksworth’s

What is it: You’ll always find something to delight you at David Hawksworth's high-end contemporary restaurant in the Rosewood Hotel Georgia, whether it’s breakfast, brunch, lunch, dinner or drinks and nibbles at the beautiful bar.

+ show more

BOOK NOW (https://www.opentable.com/hawksworth-restaurant-reservations-vancouver?ref=17848)
Tojo’s

What is it: Legendary chef Hidekazu Tojo’s food is beloved by celebrities and culinary aficionados alike. There’s a reason he has cooked with the likes of Anthony Bourdain, after all.

BOOK NOW (https://www.opentable.com/tojos-restaurant-reservations-vancouver?ref=17848)
Vij’s

What is it: The first of several Vancouver restaurants by Meeru Dhalwala and Vikram Vij. Everyone—even celebrities—lines up to get in, but snacks to keep your mouth watering are passed around regularly. Once you’re at your table, be sure to order the lamb popsicles.
Kissa Tanto

What is it: Japanese-Italian cuisine with a Japanese speakeasy feel upstairs in Chinatown, sister to nearby Bao Bei. Fun fact: a “kissa” is a Japanese jazz café and “tanto” means “so much” in Italian.

+ show more

BOOK NOW (http://www.kissatanto.com/bookatable)
Ancora

What is it: Boasting some of the prettiest views in Vancouver, Ancora grants you the chance to dine elegantly indoors or outdoors, along the False Creek Seawall.
22 Best Restaurants in Vancouver Favor Sustainability

Burdock & Co

Photograph: Courtesy Yelp/Shuwei L.

What is it: Chef-owner Andrea Carlson works with a vegetable-forward menu that shows off the bounty of British Columbia's farmers, foragers and fishers. Her Mount Pleasant restaurant is all about ethical ingredients and artisanal techniques. Brunch includes a gluten-free eggs Benedict that's to die for.

+ show more

1886

What is it: Vancouver is known for serving some of the best Cantonese food in the world. Enjoy it in the impeccable 1886, named after the year that the city's Chinatown first developed. The restaurant not only serves Cantonese favorites, but also foods hailing from Shanghai, Hunan and Szechuan—plus peking duck from Beijing.

BOOK NOW
Au Comptoir

What is it: A casual bistro with very fine French food in Kitsilano (just say “Kits”), Vancouver’s beachy neighborhood on English Bay. “Au comptoir” means “at the counter” in French and this bistro has a pretty one made of tin, plus café tables along a mirrored wall.

It’s open every day save Tuesdays for breakfast, weekend brunch, lunch, dinner and drinks.

+ show more
Boulevard Kitchen & Oyster Bar

What is it: Helmed by executive chef Alex Chen (he won the latest Gold Medal Plates culinary championship), this casually elegant downtown restaurant is inside the Sutton Place Hotel.

+ show more

Crowbar

What is it: This upscale neighborhood resto in East Van's Fraserhood district offers shared plates and inventive cocktails made with local and organic ingredients wherever possible.

BOOK NOW (https://www.bookenda.com/crowbar/?page=1)
Tuc Craft Kitchen

What is it: A funky and welcoming resto in Gastown, often packed with happy eaters. A few tables are saved for walk-ins.

Why go: Brunch (not only on weekends but Fridays too), happy hour snacks with craft cocktails and exceptional dinner. Menus

+ show more

CHECK WEBSITE (http://www.tuccraftkitchen.com/)
Tacofino

What is it: Born in the parking lot of a surf shop on Vancouver Island in Tofino, Tacofino has two food trucks and five brick-and-mortar shops in the city.

CHECK WEBSITE
The Victor

What is it: Get to The Victor through the beautiful sixth floor terrace of the relatively new boutique hotel The Douglas. Once here, order all the steak, seafood and drinks your heart desires (and your palate craves).

+ show more

AnnaLena

What is it: The toys and collectables decorating this restaurant in beachy Kitsilano belie the expertise and sophistication on the plate and on the wine list.

BOOK NOW (http://www.annalena.ca/reservations/)
MRKT East

What is it: In the relatively new downtown luxury resort Parq Vancouver, MRKT East brings a taste of Singapore to the city.

Why go: The restaurant is open from 11am until late and, while on premise, you can chat with cooks while they delight you with

CHECK WEBSITE (http://www.parqvancouver.com/restaurants/mrkt-east/)
Fat Mao Noodles

What is it: This is chef Angus An's third eatery and it's in Chinatown. Bonus list items, An's other restaurants: Maenam, Freebird Chicken Shack, Sen Pad Thai and Longtail Kitchen.
Photograph: Courtesy Yelp/Joanna L.

Juke Fried Chicken

What is it: An upscale fried-chicken joint open from 11am until late for eating-in, taking-out and home or office delivery, plus weekend brunch.

+ show more

CHECK WEBSITE (http://www.jukefriedchicken.com/)
Osteria Savio Volpe

What is it: A classic neighborhood osteria encouraging travel by bike and bus to its Kingsway East Van location. Expect simple, fresh, traditional Italian food prepared with local produce, fish and meats made “a mano in casa” (that would be: handmade in-house).

+ show more

BOOK NOW (https://www.opentable.ca/osteria-savio-volpe-reservations-vancouver?ref=17848)
Railtown Café

What is it: Now boasting four locations, this laidback café serves snacks and meals throughout the day and evening, focusing on...

Photograph: Courtesy Yelp/Fiopo F.
What is it: Now boasting four locations, this laidback café serves snacks and meals throughout the day and evening, focusing on organic and local ingredients.

CHECK WEBSITE (https://railtowncafe.ca/)
Heritage Asian Eatery

What is it: Chef Felix Zhou's casual communal downtown eatery (with a Broadway City Hall location slated to hit the city in the fall of 2018) features local ingredients, modern techniques and Asian flavors. The venue is open for lunch, dinner and weekend brunch.

CHECK WEBSITE (https://www.eatheritage.ca/)
Hoitong Chinese Seafood Restaurant

What is it: Hong Kong-quality Cantonese food hidden in a Vancouver suburb strip mall, complete with menus in Chinese.

Why go: Septuagenarian chef and owner Leung Yiu Tong’s kitchen expertise is apparent in every single one of his dishes, inc...
JapaDog

Photograph: Courtesy Yelp/Andy C.

What is it: Vancouver’s first fusion food cart, which now also boasts brick-and-mortar stores.

Why go: To taste the ultimate food fusion: a Japanese take on the hot dog. Woah.

+ show more

CHECK WEBSITE (http://www.japadog.com/)